

Guide to BACKYARD BIRDS of the Front Range

Bird Conservancy of the Rockies invites you to share the joy of birds and birdwatching through the Guide to the Backyard Birds of the Front Range.

Released in May of 2016, the guide will:

- help people identify birds often seen in backyards and local parks
- offer guidance for creating ideal backyard habitat for birds
- describe bird feeders, seeds and landscape plants that comprise a safe, bird-friendly backyard.

Use it as a field guide while out enjoying local open spaces, natural areas, parks and backyards. Take it with you to the local nursery to stock up on bird-friendly native plants and be sure to stop by your local bird feeder and seed store too. Few handy resources provide a comprehensive plan for making backyards an oasis for birds.

“Twenty-five percent of Coloradoans engage in birdwatching as a hobby. Considering nearly eighty percent of households participate in lawn and garden activities, it’s clear the Guide to the Backyard Birds of the Front Range is a resource with very broad appeal.”

~ Tammy VerCauteren, Executive Director, Bird Conservancy of the Rockies

“Wild Birds Unlimited sponsored the Guide because there were very few resources like it available to the backyard bird enthusiast. This unique and easy to read reference will appeal to both experienced birdwatchers as well as novices.”

~ Scott Menough, Owner Wild Birds Unlimited Denver

“The Guide’s high-quality photographs and simple descriptions will help any bird lover identify what they see, or wish to see, in their backyard or elsewhere.”

~ Alison Holloran, Executive Director Audubon Rockies
